Go Down Death, 1934 - Aaron Douglas - WikiArt.org

The title is ... amazing. I mean, if you can ignore completely the horrible Nazi / gay erotic nexus for, like, one second, you have to appreciate the wordplay involved in that title. Changing "Moses" to Aaron ... punning on the phrase "Go Down" ... playing "Third Sex" off of "Third Reich" ... seriously great.

In 1934, Aaron Douglas returned to his "God's Trombones" series, originally created as illustrations to accompany James Weldon Johnson's 1927 book of Negro spirituals in verse, God's Trombones. Douglas's illustration Go Down Death accompanied Johnson's funeral sermon of the same name. The sermon describes God's decision to have the Angel of Death ride down on his winged horse and carry Sister ...

Go down, Aaron by Chris Davidson, 1967, Greenleaf Classics edition, in English

Narratives: Go Down Death, Aaron Douglas

Description. The leading painter of the Harlem Renaissance, Douglas based this painting on an illustration he made for God's Trombones: Seven Negro Sermons in Verse (1927), a book by noted author and civil rights advocate James Weldon Johnson. Its subject tells the story of a winged angel of death who races through the heavens on horseback to rescue a woman from a life of suffering.
